Early on, Weber started taking classes at the college in his spare time. His favorite subject is Indian studies, and his favorite instructors are Steve Crothamel and Patricia Dixon in the American Indian Studies Department.

John Dise, a college counselor, developed a personal interest in Weber and helped him qualify for graduation this Spring. "I hope other people see what Ken has done and realize it isn’t time to give up when they reach 65,” Dise said.

"There’s so much that people like Ken can do later in life, and we want to help them do it.”

Ken Weber sits at a table on the Palomar College campus as John Dise, counselor at the college, gives him assistance in his studies. At 82, the well-known Weber will be one of 1,134 graduates tomorrow night.
