Palomar College offers advice on career change

SAN MARCOS — John Disce says there are too many people who are unhappy in their jobs.

That is why he is making 1990 the “Year of the Career Change” at Palomar College’s Career Center.

“Too many individuals are dissatisfied with their present jobs but don’t want to change or are not finding a more satisfying career,” said Disce, director of the career center and a Palomar counselor for 17 years.

“My advice to those people is to stop procrastinating and follow a New Year’s resolution in 1990 to explore that career change they have been thinking about.”

Disce is inviting Palomar College students and district residents to stop by the career center for advice and counseling.

“At Palomar we can help people identify their strengths and guide them to an exciting career,” Disce said. “Our tangible program has helped many people to discover a meaningful life.”

Disce acknowledges that career changes often require training at night or on weekends and financial hardships.

But, he said, “sometimes a person’s standard of living has to dip for a while in order to rise later...how many times does a person look back and wish they had started something they could have been completed by now?”
