Shakespeare's Stage

When people think of William Shakespeare, they usually think of the Globe Theatre in London. However, his work is associated with a few lesser-known facts.

The Globe Theatre is not only a historical site, but also a site of beauty. The stage itself is a representation of the heavens and earth. The stage floor is made of wood and is still repaired by wooden tools. The only addition to the structure of the theatre is the roof, which is not made by wooden tools. The Globe also was made by wooden tools out of wood by hand.

Shakespeare's plays were performed in London because the only building left in London for this purpose was the Globe. The Globe is not only a historical site, but also a site of beauty. It is meant to represent heaven and earth. The stage floor is made of wood and is still repaired by wooden tools. The only addition to the structure of the theatre is the roof, which is not made by wooden tools.
