

Outside Artifact Reflection
Semester 4: Fall 2010
Diversity Presentation at Warren College

Why I Selected This Artifact

Warren College at UCSD had a transfer student orientation. To address the recent racial tensions at UCSD, the Dean of Warren College, also my classmate, wanted to implement a diversity workshop into the orientation. So, two other classmates and I came together to create the presentation. I chose this artifact because the diversity presentation was an outside presentation done for a classmate and with two other classmates. So, while this artifact was not related to the doctoral program, this artifact was in collaboration with my cohort-mates.

Program Learning Outcomes

The Diversity Presentation at Warren College is a demonstration of collaboration. We were given the goal and we created a presentation about inter-culturalism that we were able to present in an interactive way with two groups of 200 students. In addition to the presentation, we were able to represent our respective institutions and show collaboration between three different systems (UCSD, SDSU, and Palomar College). The presentation promoted diversity and student success.

My Personal and Professional Goals

The best part about this presentation is that I was able to practice my presentation skills for a larger group of students outside of Palomar College. I also enjoyed representing Palomar College in a collaborative setting. Coincidentally, a few of my recently transferred students was in the audience. By presenting at UCSD, I feel that the communication lines are more open for future collaborative venues.
